

FINIS.

The prologue to Juliet and Romeo.

Two households both alike in dignitie,
In faire Verona where wee lay o^r scene)
From ancient grudge, breaks to new mutinie
where civill blood makes civil hands uncleane:
From forth the satall boynes of this fow foeg,
A paire of starre-crost lovers take thire life:
whose misadventur'd piteous overthrow loke with thire death burie thire parents strife

(Dove,
The fearfull passage of thire death-marks
And the continuance of thire parents rage:
Which but thire childrens death naught could steepe
Is now the tow-houres trafficke of our stage.
The weh if you with patient eares attend,
what heere shall misse o^r toyle shall strive to mend
